Guide to Managing Pelvic Pain

PELVIC FLOOR OVERACTIVITY

Your pelvic floor is an amazing set of muscles! The deep pelvic floor sits about 3 cm inside you and attaches from the pubic bone all the way back to the tailbone. You also have pelvic wall muscles that sit in front of the bladder and attach outwards onto your hip bones. When functioning well these muscles generate core strength, support our organs to prevent prolapse and stop bladder and bowel leaks. Most people understand the consequences of a weak pelvic floor, but it is common with longstanding pelvic pain that these muscles can become overactive, short and tight. Overactive pelvic floor muscles can cause the following symptoms:

- Abdominal pain
- Pain with intercourse
- Difficulty using tampons
- Hesitancy and discomfort with urination
- Back pain
- Constipation

An important part of your treatment is for you to regain control of these muscles so they can get back their full range of motion of contract, relax and gently bulge for bowel emptying.

RELAXATION EXERCISES

To contract the pelvic floor you need to tighten and lift the muscle all the way from the back at the anus to the front of the vagina and bladder. If you have this guide it is most likely that you are already very good at this! Therefore your focus needs to be the downward / relaxation phase. So here is your homework:

- Each night lying down place a hand on your abdomen and start with 2 minutes of relaxed abdominal breathing (belly and ribs expand on the inhale and deflate on the exhale);
- Begin with a very small lift of the pelvic floor from anus to vagina for 1 second so that your brain can connect to the muscle;
- Then relax down, down and down again taking 5 seconds to release all the way down from belly button, to vagina and anus;
- Repeat 8 times.

Some great visualisations for this are:

1. Your pelvic floor contracts just like a claw crane vending machine. To tighten, the claw closes in around the toy then lifts up. To relax down, the claw lowers back down and then opens out fully to release the toy.

2. When you relax your pelvic floor, visualise a pebble hitting the water. It drops down, and then ripples out and open.

YOGA FLOW for pelvic floor overactivity

Movement is so GOOD for pelvic pain! This sequence is designed to be able to do most days, and the focus is on breathing into the abdomen to help soften down the pelvic floor. Some focus points:

- In each asana (position) the focus should be on calm relaxed breaths. Don't force it. The abdomen softens and fills with air on the inhale and deflates on the exhale. Aim for 3-5 breaths in each pose.
- In down dog and deep squat imagine your two sit bones gently softening away from each other.
- With hip stretch, hamstring stretch and runners lunge try to keep the left and right sides of your pelvis level (square the hips).
- Always move into a comfortable stretch and don't push. Be kind to your body and have fun with your movement!

TOILET POSTURE

A common consequence of pelvic floor dysfunction is constipation, as the muscles can lack the ability to relax and gently bulge to assist defaecation. One way you can help your pelvic floor muscles to relax down and improve symptoms of constipation is to have a good toilet set-up. You should:

- Have 2 foot-stools at either side of your toilet so your knees are wide apart and higher than your hips;
- In this position lean forward with a straight spine, elbows resting out on your knees;
- Bulge your abdomen out (do not contract it in towards your spine) then gently push down for bowel motion (do not strain);
- Keep working on the co-ordination of your muscles for at least 6 weeks until it becomes your new normal.

About Alana...
